Manner of affixation and positioning of notice.

(2) Where, in a particular case, a notice does not appear in one of the precise locations prescribed in this regulation but a person looking in one of those locations would be reasonably certain to find a notice in another somewhat different location, that notice will be acceptable under this regulation.

5. (1) In the case of works published in book form, a notice reproduced on the copies in any of the following locations is acceptable —

Works published in book form.

(a) on the title page;

- (b) on the page immediately following the title page;
 - (c) on either side of the front cover or, if there is no front cover, either side of the front leaf of the copies;

 - (C) through format, wording or both, the application of the notice to the particular contribution is made clear;
- (c) in a case where the separate contribution is a musical work, in addition to any of the locations listed in paragraph (1)(a) and (b), a notice is acceptable if it is located on the first page of music of the contribution.

(2) As an alternative to placing the notice on one of the pages where a separate contribution itself appears, the contribution is considered to bear its own notice if the notice appears clearly in juxtaposition with a separate listing of the contribution by title, or if the contribution is untitled, by a description reasonably identifying the contribution —

- (a) on the page bearing the copyright notice for the collective work as a whole, if any; or
- (b) in a clearly identified and readily-accessible table of contents or listing of acknowledgements appearing near the front or back of the collective work as a whole.

- (c) a notice that is continuously on terminal display; or
- (d) a legible notice reproduced durably, so as to withstand normal use, on a gummed or other label securely affixed to the copies or to a box, reel, cartridge, cassette or other container used as a permanent receptacle for the copies.

Motion pictures and other audiovisual works.

9. The following constitute examples of acceptable methods of affixation and positions of the copyright notice on motion pictures and other audiovisual works —

- (a) a notice that is embodied in copies by a photomechanical or electronic process, in such a position that it ordinarily would appear whenever the work is performed in its entirety, and that is located —
 - (i) with or near the title;
 - (ii) with the cast, credits, and similar information;

- (iii) at or immediately following the beginning of the work; or
 - (iv) at or immediately preceding the end of the work;

- (b) where a work is reproduced in three-dimensional copies, a notice affixed directly or by means of a label cemented, sewn, or otherwise attached durably, so as to withstand normal use, to any visible portion of the work, or to any base, mounting, framing, or other material on which the copies are durably attached, so as to withstand normal use, or in which they are permanently housed, is acceptable;

- (c) where, because of the size or physical characteristics of the material in which the work is reproduced in copies, it is impossible or extremely impracticable to affix a notice to the copies directly or by means of a durable label, a notice is acceptable if it appears on a tag that is of durable material, so as to withstand normal use, and that is attached to the copy with sufficient durability that it will remain with the copy while it is passing through its normal channels of commerce;
 - (d) where a work is reproduced in copies consisting of sheet-like or strip material bearing multiple or continuous reproductions of the work, the notice may be applied —
 - (i) to the reproduction itself,
 - (ii) to the margin, selvage or reverse side of the material at frequent and regular intervals, or
 - (iii) if the material contains neither a selvage nor a reverse side, to tags or labels, attached to the copies and to any spools, reels, or containers housing them in such a way that a notice is visible while the copies are passing through their normal channels of commerce;
 - (e) if the work is permanently housed in a container, such as a game or puzzle box, a notice reproduced on the permanent container is acceptable.
